"JOY OF LIVING" IN AN ESTHONIAN TOWN IS REVEALED

Residents Happy in Great Contrast to Those in Nearby Russia

WORK FOR SELVES

Citizens of Russia Work For State; Conditions Less Desirable

(Note: The "joy of living" in an Esthonian market town is graphically described by H. R. Knickerbocker in the seventh article of his series comparing Baltic capitalism with Soviet Communism.)

By H. R. Knickerbocker

PETERSBURG, Esthonia, May 20.—(INS)—In the "Black Cat" restaurant a young man sat at a table and yodelled to himself. Two bearded peasants expostulated. Another staggered out dragging one completely paralyzed.

In the room at the right a chorus hawled Esthonian words to the old German tune "Trink, Trink, Bruederlein Trink!" A strong smell of sheepskin, vodka, and cabbage soup saturated the room.

It was only noon but the bi-monthly market in Petersburg, down in the southeast corner of Esthonia next to the Russian border, was well under way. They told me Petersburg was the poorest place in Esthonia. In this district was one of the first capitals of Rurik's Russia. Peasants here live now like they did half a century ago in Russia. It would make a good place to draw comparisons with new Russia.

A Setu woman in a cream colored heavy woolen skirt and countless petticoats walked noiselessly by, looking for her man and smiling ironically. Setus are a tribe neither Russian nor Esthonian. They live to themselves, work hard, save and do well. The others call them "peasant Jews."

Over in a corner an accordion player born blind pumped out a rousing Russian tune. Pushing through the throng a peasant grabbed a chair and shoved a sack under it. Out of the sack came the frantic squeals of a pig.

A girl behind the counter served vodka in large tumblers at six American cents a tumbler. She kept sending out to the kitchen for more. It did look like old Russia.

Outside the market was going strong. Throngs of peasants paraded up and down between rows of booths and wagons while vendors barked their wares: bread, meat, eggs, and fish; home-made spinning wheels, hand-forged knives, firkins and tubs and barrels; baskets and mats; second hand clothing and new-made boots; harness and caps and toys and ribbons, wealth galore. Here was free trade, capitalist trade, and what a lot of life there was in it.

Just across the border was Soviet Russia. Airplanes reminded us of it. They soared above our heads and the peasants gawked and marvelled. Soldiers reminded us of it. They whipped by in sleighs drawn by fast horses, and each had a rifle strapped to his back. Today they held a small air maneuver in Petersburg to keep their hand in on the Soviet border.

Right over that border and from there all the way to the sea of Japan there is not to be found today another market like this one. True they have markets in the Soviet Union, but the life and the glamour are gone out of them. For all trade in the Soviet Union is state trade, all manufacturing, even of artisan's handwork, is organized into trusts, syndicates, cartels. Nobody works for himself. Everybody works for the state.

This is indeed a poor part of Esthonia, a poor place for any country. But what a riotously good time they seemed to have. The sober ones swapped horses. For $6.00 you could buy a horse. Shouts of laughter went

MRS. DUNN PAYS FINE, COSTS, UNDER PROTEST

Prominent Philadelphia Admits Harboring Dogs Minus Licenses

WAS SECOND SUMMONS

"Perfectly frightful!"

This is the manner in which Mrs. Elizabeth Dunn, prominent Philadelphia society matron, expressed herself when Justice of the Peace Leo Lynn, Edgely, imposed upon her a fine and costs totalling $15.00 when charges of harboring dogs without 1935 licenses were pressed Saturday.

The hearing occurred in the justice's office at Edgely, and was the second time such was scheduled. Mrs. Dunn failing to appear on May 14th after notice had been given.

"From what I've been told I don't see why I should appear," she said to the one hearing the case, and the peace officer then went into detailed explanation that the dogs were kept on her property, "Sunbury," Newportville Road, Bristol Township. "I'll pay $5.00, but I don't see that it is a just claim," she retorted. When asked what the $5.00 was for, Mrs. Dunn quickly said, "The $5.00 is for the licenses." "But you say you have since gotten the licenses," suggested Mr. Lynn, as he refused to accept this amount. The fine set was $5, and the costs $10.00. Then he told Mrs. Dunn that if she cared to appeal the case, she could do so and the fine and costs would be doubled. "You know under the law I could fine you from $5 to $100 for each dog. As it is I'm being lenient." Two dogs are said to have been found on the Dunn place, minus the necessary licenses, one a collie and the other a wire-haired terrier.

The justice reminded the woman, when she remonstrated that she had not had any official notice to appear. "You said the police captain in Philadelphia had sent an officer to serve you with a notice."

"I'm willing to pay the fine but not the costs," continued Mrs. Dunn. Then the judge mentioned the courtesies extended, reviewing the case. He told her on May 7th a field agent from the Bureau of Animal Industry, Harrisburg, visited the Dunn country home, "Sunbury," as he was checking up on dogs in the township following a case of rabies at Edgely. "That agent left word with a note at your home in Bristol Township, telling you of the affair; and you were to appear May 7th. When you did not come I sent a warrant to Philadelphia."

"I understood you could keep dogs without licenses as long as they were kept on the property," added Mrs. Dunn. Then she asked, "Where do you get your licenses, anyhow—Doylestown?"

In reference to the note left at the house by the state official, Mrs. Dunn said she thought the notice had to be served personally. When informed this was not so, the woman replied, "I'm perfectly willing to get a license, but you make it so frightfully difficult to get licenses in these counties."

Continuing to tell of courtesies shown, Mr. Lynn said, "I didn't issue a body warrant—you were merely asked to appear here at a specified time." Then he continued, "You know what the captain of police in your city would have done if you hadn't come?" Then came the quick retort, "I don't think so."

After considerable discussion Mrs. Dunn said she would pay but "distinctly under protest."

"Will you give me a receipt if I pay under protest?" she inquired, and was informed a receipt would gladly be given regardless of the manner in which she paid.

"Why is it way out in Edgely I have to come?" was another query of Mrs. Dunn, and still another, "Why couldn't your cousin (Edward Lynn, Bristol justice of the peace) take the money?" It was explained that the districts are separate.

The woman, who at the beginning of the hearing smilingly said she knew "practically nothing" of the case, was attired in a black silk dress with white lace collar, black hat and brown coat. The only note of color was a necklace of large gold beads. She was accompanied by a young man whom in answer to a question she stated was not her son.

Mrs. Dunn is a former resident of Bristol but now resides in Philadelphia, and came into prominence when

FIVE INJURED IN THREE SEPARATE AUTO ACCIDENTS

Two Residents of Bristol and Two of Cornwallis Included

ONE CAR HITS POLE

Two Cars Sideswipe On The Lincoln Highway at South Langhorne

Two Bristol men were injured early yesterday morning when the car in which three were riding struck a pole on the highway at Bridgewater.

Those injured: Nick Gallone, Logan street, deep laceration, three to four inches long, on forehead, and bruises of the neck; Samuel Rago, Jefferson avenue, small lacerations of the head, brush burns of the forehead and neck. The third man in the party, Salvatore Seneca, was unhurt. The two were treated at Harriman Hospital.

The car was considerably damaged. In an accident on a New Jersey state highway near Mount Holly, last night, two Cornwallis Heights residents, were hurt. These are: Miss Carrie Benton, and Lester Kennedy, driver of the car. Miss Benton suffered lacerations of the nose and face, Kennedy sustained fractures of seven ribs. Both were treated at the Burlington County Hospital, Mount Holly, where they were held under observation.

A third person was injured in this accident, which resulted from two cars colliding. Miss Elizabeth Berzy, Leonia, N. J., a passenger in the machine driven by Robert Shackleton, Rahway, suffered minor lacerations and bruises. She did not require hospital treatment. Shackleton was merely shaken up. State police from Columbus investigated.

Side-swiping on the Lincoln highway, one mile East of South Langhorne, yesterday morning at 3.10, two cars were considerably damaged, and one young woman hurt. The injured is Miss Betty Snyder, 1817 S. 11th street, Philadelphia, who had contusions of the head.

The drivers of the cars were David Tepper, 1745 Belvidere avenue, Philadelphia, with whom Miss Snyder was riding; and Louis Price, 135 Belmont avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The case was investigated by patrolman G. F. Carfagno, of South Langhorne barracks, but no arrests were made.

MAY PROCESSION HERE PARTICIPATED IN BY 800

St. Ann's Parish Members, and Those Taking First Communion, Take Part

ALSO SCHOOL PUPILS

A religious procession here yesterday afternoon, attracted the attention of many of the residents of the borough.

At 3.30 o'clock, 800 members of the St. Ann's Roman Catholic parish participated in a May procession which led from the church through several streets in that section of the borough. The procession included children of the parish who received their first communion yesterday, the pages of St. Michael, Sisters of the Most Holy Trinity who were in charge of the children, altar boys of the church, the three priests of the parish, the statue of the Blessed Mother, banners of the organizations in line, the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary with members in attendance totalling 200, and other members of the congregation, including 25 girls dressed as angels. The Rev. Father Marcellini Romagnolo, who officiated at the communion service, together with the Rev. Father Thomas Rocca and Herbert Buratto, were in the procession.

The route led from the church, down Dorrance street, to Wood, Penn, Cedar, Franklin, Penn, to the church. The communion service was held at eight a. m. For this service and for the procession the young folks received communion for the first time were in their special garbs. The girls were attired in dresses and veils of white, and the boys wore white blouses with white arm bands, and their trousers were of dark material.

Find Body of Male Child Wrapped in Newspaper

The body of a male child about one week old was found yesterday on the Ruelofs Road, 1,000 yards off the Lincoln Highway, near Fallsington. The body was wrapped in a copy of a Philadelphia newspaper dated May 1st, and it could not be seen from the roadway.

Charles H. McCue, 706 Center street, Trenton, N. J., who was walking along the embankment, found the body. He notified the authorities and Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo and State Police responded.

Miss Margaret Spangler, Villa Nova, paid a several days' visit to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Spangler, 346 Jefferson avenue.

No Knowledge of Blaze Having Destroyed Plant

According to report the forest fire which yesterday swept over 75 acres in New Jersey destroyed the sand plant of the Brennan Sand Company. The report this morning could not be verified.

When asked concerning the loss this morning, Michael Brennan, one of the Brennan brothers and a joint owner of the plant, had no knowledge of the fire having destroyed their property. "This is the first I heard of that," said Mr. Brennan. "I don't see how that could happen because the land near our plant was pretty well cleared off."

Mr. Brennan left immediately for Whiting, Ocean County, near which the plant is located.

VANDALISM AT HIGH SCHOOL MUST STOP

Windows Broken From Outside, Doors Defaced and Iron Fence Torn Apart

RAIN SPOUTS RIPPED OFF

This community looks with reproach and disdain upon the vandalism that has been committed at the high school during the past winter and the more recent spring months.

Many windows have been broken by stones being thrown through them from the outside. The outside doors have been defaced by markings and the woodwork carved into by the use of small pocket knives. Rain spouts have been torn down. The fence surrounding the ground has been torn apart at numerous places and worst of all the building has been entered and rooms ransacked on several occasions.

All for no purpose except to show a tendency to be mischievous and destructive. The authorities have knowledge that these depredations are being committed by the young folks who use the grounds for play after school hours.

There is no desire to accuse the guilty of any viciousness, but that their acts manifest gross thoughtlessness and heedlessness of the rights of others, there is no doubt. Parental supervision of their play seems to be entirely lacking. To say the least, these acts are disloyal and un-American and cannot be tolerated in any civilized community where the churches and schools should of right be respected and revered by old and young, as sacred to the advancement of Christianity and education.

To repeat, these conditions can no longer be tolerated and we trust this message will be a warning to all parents, that they may advise their children of the harm they are doing and admonish them of the consequences, if they persist. In this the parent is to be held equally culpable, if these depredations continue.

Borough Council has joined with the Board of Education in a determined effort to stop this willful destruction of property and thus save money for the taxpayer.

It is hoped it will never become necessary for those in authority to use the strong arm of the law to stop such proclivities and it would certainly be a blot on the community life here if it were to become a necessity to apprehend these offenders and bring them to punishment for such readily avoidable offenses, if only old and young alike observed the simple text of the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

School property belongs to the community and it is as sacred to that community as the home is to its owner, and should be as zealously guarded.

Teamsters' Union Strike

Philadelphia, May 20.—Threatening the city with a produce shortage, members of the truck and teamsters' union went on strike here today, tying up tens of thousands of dollars worth of perishable foodstuffs. The strike was called by the union group in their dispute over independent truckers.

Find Child's Body

New York City, May 20.—The body of eight-year old Shirley Evans, for whom an intensive search had been conducted here since her disappearance Friday night, was found today in an excavation at the rear of her home, Jackson Heights, Queens.

Although no definite word was forthcoming from authorities, the activities of District Attorney Charles P. Sullivan, Queens, and the Queens Homicide Squad, caused the report the child had been murdered. The child's body was buried under loose gravel, dirt and debris. A bit of her red dress protruded and it was this that caught the eyes of several searchers who were members of a party of the neighborhood relief workers and Shirley's playmates, conducted by the police. A slight cave-in indicated it would have been possible for Shirley to have fallen to her death. She lay in a crouched position, her face pressed to the ground, her knees drawn up under her, her back directly against a concrete foundation about four feet from the surface.

Fourteen records were shattered as Bristol High captured Classes A and C, and Fallsington repeated in the B unit, in the Fifteenth Annual Bucks County Interscholastic Meet held at Sellersville-Perkasie on Saturday. Buckingham was the victor in Class D.

Bristol compiled a total of 68 points and Langhorne, who were runners up in the major class tallied 64½. Fallsington annexed 80½ points to their nearest competitor, Buckingham, who had a total of 54½ points. In the Class C events, Bristol Borough ran up a total of 57½ tallies to Falls Township, runner-up, annexation of 28.

The records which fell before this galaxy of athletic competition were fourteen in number and one mark was equalled. In Class A, Eleanor Petrick of Bristol shattered the standing broad jump record by eight feet, 4 inches. This mark is but one inch off the world's mark for this event.

Joe Conti, also of Bristol, broke the mark in the shot put by throwing the ball 45 feet, three and a half inches. In the girls' 75 yard dash, Josephine Diehl, of Quakertown, won with 9.4. In the girls' quarter mile relay, the Bristol representatives of Duffy, Larzalere, Gibson and Bono, captured this with the time of 55.7.

"West Point of the Air" Is Most Exciting Film

With the shrill scream of zooming airplanes as a blood-stirring background, Wallace Beery comes to the grand screen in the most startling aviation spectacle of the year, "West Point of the Air," tonight and Tuesday.

Beery in his role as "Big Mike" gives a dramatic portrayal that surpasses even his performance in "The Champ." His pathetic love for a son whose conceit almost brings disgrace to the Air Corps builds into the foundation for one of the most smashing screen climaxes ever filmed.

Heading the supporting cast as the young romantic lead is Maureen O'Sullivan.

The most important role since his smash hit in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" is filled by Robert Young as "Little Mike," Beery's son. He gives a notable performance as a young man whose ego interferes with good sense until parental love helps him to find himself.

Rosalind Russell as the "other woman" in the story gives an intelligent and deft handling to her scenes with Young.

CARDS TONIGHT

The card party scheduled for tonight at 8.30 in the American Legion home, a benefit for the Auxiliary, promises to be a big success. Prizes include: lamp, draft screen, groceries, silk underwear, hosiery, plants, etc. Mrs. Eli Barnfield is chairwoman, being aided by Mrs.

MR. PECK'S REPORT

In his latest report on our foreign trade, wherein he presents the United States' net international trade deficit in 1934 at 970 millions, George N. Peck, special advisor on foreign trade to the president, again reveals that he and Secretaries Hull and Wallace are as far as ever from seeing eye to eye on our foreign commerce policies.

Emphasizing his finding that the United States is a creditor nation only on the basis of defaulted war debts and outdated investment estimates, which he considers a worthless basis, Mr. Peck made these two recommendations: first, that there be inaugurated "a detailed study of our direct investments abroad and of foreigners' direct investments in the United States, to supplement the studies now being made of capital movements"; second, that a review be made of "all national policies based in whole or in part upon our international creditor status."

Because of what he considers our falsely based creditor situation, Mr. Peck would abandon the Hull policy of negotiating reciprocal tariff treaties on the unconditional most favored nation basis and initiate the policy of negotiating agreements country by country on a conditional basis. The president made no comment on the report except that it should be of general interest. This is interpreted as meaning that the Hull program will be continued. Both Secretary Hull and Secretary Wallace have argued that goods exported can only be paid for by goods received.

THE NEWS

Probably it is proper that in an age of propaganda the government, which is by far the biggest thing in the country anyhow, should seek supremacy in the field of publicity and press-agency. At any rate, there is not much doubt about its having first place, and more space, and more and probably better press agents, than any other administration in the past or any rival agency of the present.

The administration endeavor has been in two directions. Seeking to fill the pockets of the correspondents and the columns of the papers with "canned" news—which is no news at all, usually—it has sought at the same time to stop up the "leaks" in official intelligence. In other words, the effort has been to stop giving out what may be unfavorable, though facts, to the newspapers of the nation.

Government press-agency, of course, is nothing new. It merely happens to be on a grander scale than heretofore, which is causing some alarm. The censorship, too, has been tried before, but never so persistently. Neither is a particular cause for alarm so long as there is a free press and an energetic and enterprising army of correspondents at the capital. They will continue to wade through the flood of press-agent material and at the same time to find the leaks in the bona fide news. It is immensely so their credit.

If "most business men" are in agreement with the president's program, as he believes them to be, they are strangely silent about it.

The Republicans at Washington apparently have been proceeding on the theory that if you look after the issues the candidates will take care of themselves.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol, Nov. 13, 1875. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

Week Ending November 13, 1875

A little girl named Mary Lear, aged seven years, daughter of Mrs. George W. Packenthall, living at Riegelsville, was fatally burned last Thursday afternoon, by her clothes taking fire from the stove. We learn from the Doylestown Intelligencer that it is supposed that the child was in the act of putting wood into the kitchen stove, using her dress to handle the holder, to remove the stove lid, and that the blaze struck out and caught her dress. The child's mother, who was in the yard at the time, hearing her screams, rushed into the house and found her child in flames, and with great presence of mind, immediately wrapped a piece of carpet around her and smothered the fire.

But the little sufferer was terribly burnt about the limbs and body, and after suffering for nearly a day and a night she was taken with convulsions to which she had been subjected, and death came to her relief.

Attleboro residents purchased Northern Pacific bonds to the amount of about $30,000.

The new school house at Yardley is expected to be ready for occupancy on the 24th instant.

The Town Council of New Hope has offered a reward for the arrest and conviction of the person who set fire to the barn of George A. Cook. This makes the entire reward offered $1,000.

The following persons were installed as officers of Golden Rule Lodge, I. O. O. F., by Mr. Richard Shaw, Lodge Deputy, on Tuesday evening last: W. C. T. Mr. Alex. Morrison; R. H. S. Miss Bertha Stradling; L. H. S. Miss Mary Margerum; W. V. T. Miss Minnie Bailey; F. S. Daniel; Muncy; T. Angus C. York; R. S. Miss Lena Weeks; A. S. Miss Kate Spring; C. David Spencer; M. Elliott Wright; D. M. Miss Maria Stackhouse; I. G. Walter McRoberts; O. G. Charles Hendricks.

At the recent meeting of the Hat-borough Library Company, the treasurer reported the receipts of the last year $509; expenses $367; balance $73. During the last year three new shares have been sold. The Library Company has 136 members; the annual tax is $1.50 per member. The volumes, nearly 5,000 in number, have been carefully arranged in alphabetical order, according to their different classes, and a new catalogue is to be printed. S. S. Conly, C. C. McNair, and L. R. Willard were elected directors.

The Humesville borough council met on Tuesday evening. Several important measures were passed: One for the width of Neshaminy street, north of Newtown avenue, which was fixed at 40 feet. Another giving the committee on highways discretionary oversight of the roads and bridges. The committee on street lamps reported that sufficient had been subscribed to furnish lamps and oil, and that the lamps had been purchased and would be put up in a few days. It is contemplated to have them lighted for at least one hundred nights during the year at public expense.

Last Thursday a jury appointed by the court on behalf of Mrs. Mary L. Keim, consisting of Joseph Harvey and Hugh Atkinson of Newtown, Edward Ely and Squire Schofield of Yardleyville, Pierson Mitchell of Attleborough, Robert Eastburn of New Hope, and James G. Hibbs, of Humesville, met at Davis Hotel, all being present but Mr. Hibbs. By agreement of the parties it was decided to hear the case with six jurymen. Mrs. Keim claimed damages for the 75 feet taken for the opening of Jefferson avenue through to Radcliffe street. The jury failed to arrive at a decision, and adjourned to meet at Newtown. The award was announced in Bristol this morning, the jury awarding Mrs. Keim $750 or ten dollars a foot for the 75 feet. Anthony Swain was counsel for the claimant, and B. F. Gilkeson represented the borough.

A stated meeting of Borough Council was held at the Town Hall on Monday evening, 16th inst. — Members present, Charles E. Scott, Burgess; Dr. William B. Baker, C. W. Pearce, A. L. Packard, Samuel Pike, Wm. Jones, Henry Rue, James M. Slack, David Stackhouse, I. S. Tomlinson, and J. Wesley Wright, clerk. . . . On motion of J. W. Wright, the street committee were authorized to confer with the Gas Company, and ascertain upon what terms the lamps could be allowed to burn all night.

she sued her former husband, Houston Dunn, Sr., for support of their children several months ago.

A case involving her son, Houston Dunn, Jr.'s, ownership of dogs, is now pending, this being in regard to a dog said to belong to young Dunn, biting a child in Fergusonsville. According to officers, alleged promises of young Dunn to attend to the finances for doctor's bill in the case have been ignored.

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"

by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

CHAPTER XLII

Montigny at eleven o'clock was in conference with Doctor Inman, the chemist and Captain Nobley, at the latter's laboratory at headquarters. Doctor Inman had rolled up his sleeves and busied himself with test tubes and reagents as they talked. He had at hand various treasured exhibits from the bedroom of Violet Elderbank, including the small bar of Fallet toilet soap from the bathroom, the jar of cold cream from the vanity dresser, the strips of adhesive tape which had been used in gagging the murder victim, and also the pot of powdered burnt cork which Roger Duane had used, together with a sample of the soot from the chimney of the bedroom.

"Doctor Inman and I have discussed this subject before," explained Montigny, "but yesterday, when I discovered new evidence which required his expert opinion, Doctor Inman unfortunately was out of town. He has already performed certain research work as a preliminary to this test—little was needed, of course, because Doctor Inman is an expert in the chemistry of soaps."

Doctor Inman just now was delicately manipulating an Egyptian scarab ring. "All right," said Captain Nobley impatiently. "And what is it that you propose to prove?"

"The soap used by the unfortunate Mrs. Elderbank," continued Montigny evenly, "is an item in which I have failed greatly to interest Inspector McEniry."

"Or me," said Nobley tersely. "I can't see where it will get you."

"Let me explain, first—and Doctor Inman will correct me when I fall into error—that this particular brand of soap, called 'Fallet,' is a French soap in name only. It is made in New Jersey, by Hargett & Company."

"Yes," confirmed the chemist, "but from a French formula, the secret of a celebrated soap manufacturer of Marseilles."

"It is a very expensive soap," continued Montigny, "the kind of soap that one would expect the wife of a millionaire to prefer. It is manufactured of very costly ingredients, by a costly process. As a result it is purer than most soaps, contains no uncombined alkali, has a water content of less than eleven per cent, is perfumed by the 'cold method,' which Doctor Inman will explain to you, and is identifiable in very small quantities for these reasons and for the further reason that fine oils from the Orient—sesame and ground nut—comprise its base. Is that correct, Doctor Inman?"

"Quite," said the chemist. "It also contains a quantity of manganese dioxide for coloring matter, which is readily detected. The 'cold method' of perfuming to which Captain Montigny refers also makes the soap more readily identifiable. Cheaper toilet soaps are perfumed by melting and stirring into the mass some cheap odorous ingredient which is not affected by alkali under the influence of heat. But in the case of finer soaps like this the scent is added in the last stage of manufacture. The soap is shaved down to thin slices and the essential oil mixed in by special machinery—hence this ingredient is found chemically free, uncombined, in the finished product. And knowing the exact material that is used for this purpose—I am able to identify for you the minutest quantities."

Nobley was evidently not pleased but considerably interested. "All right, but where does that get you," he demanded.

"It gets us," replied Montigny, "to the scarab ring which Doctor Inman has just examined. In the bezel of this ring—in the cracks and corners of its mounting—Doctor Inman will tell you that he has discovered small but significant quantities of Fallet toilet soap."

The chemist nodded. "Unquestionably," he said, "and I can prove it to any jury of experts."

"All right, tell me the rest," urged Nobley. "Whose ring is it?"

"It is the ring of the person," declared Montigny, "who took the leading part in the robbery and murder of Mrs. Violet Elderbank."

"Merriam!" barked Nobley. "Is it Merriam's ring?"

"Not Merriam's, but the ring of another who is safely watched by Police Department eyes—one Douglas W. Coulter. It is the only evidence we have against him, and it is conclusive."

"Why so?" demanded Nobley. "It doesn't prove he killed Mrs. Elderbank. Perhaps he used Fallet toilet soap himself."

"He did not, and does not—but I am coming to that. There is another means of identification. You will remember that we found ingrained in this small bar of soap certain particles of grit and soot—that we found similar particles in the jar of cold cream on Mrs. Elderbank's dresser. We identified them microscopically as particles of soot from her fireplace. There are identical granules, Doctor Inman will tell you, in the soap we have found adhering to the murderer's ring."

The chemist had prepared slides which he examined under Nobley's microscope. "No question of that, either," he declared. "There is as much soot as soap."

"The murderer," Montigny went on, "smeared the back of the fingers of his left hand with soot which he wished to smear on the bedclothing. He left a quantity in his ring. He used a distinctive soap for the purpose of getting off the woman's rings—he left, unwittingly, a quantity of that also in his ring."

"But he must have washed his hands many times since last Monday night," objected Nobley. "Why didn't he wash these traces from his ring?"

Montigny nodded gravely. "The point is well taken. He has not worn his ring. He took it off, by his own admission, the day following the murder. He was not wearing it then. I noted the pale hand on his finger where he had been wearing a ring, but he was wearing it no longer. I looked for it later, in his rooms. If you will pardon the expression—stole it. It is a very precious scarab."

"But you are sure he had no access to similar soap elsewhere?" persisted Nobley, defending his last ditch.

"He does not use, at his apartment, at his office, or at his club—I have checked these matters—Fallet toilet soap or any soap remotely resembling it chemically."

"Then we had better go upstairs," said Nobley suddenly, "and tell this to Inspector McEniry. He is waiting on the floor of his office and mangle an unlighted cigar."

"Well, what've you birds got this time?" he demanded. "Some more pretty little cobweb clues? Who committed the crime this time—Mary Queen of Scots?"

"Mr. Merriam, I suspect," said Montigny suavely, "has not confessed."

"You're mighty right he hasn't. We can't get a peep out of that guy. He sticks to his story. But he did it and I'm going to prove it. What I'm waiting on right now is this bird Valcour."

"Valcour?" exclaimed Montigny. "What news of him?"

"We've got him, that's about all. No fault of ours, though—he gave himself up at Tenth Precinct. Said he hadn't done a thing wrong. And he's a French soap in name only. It is made in New Jersey, by Hargett & Company."

"Yes," confirmed the chemist, "but from a French formula, the secret of a celebrated soap manufacturer of Marseilles."

"And if he hadn't been so extra slick delivering the ice in the back of that Goldfish picture we wouldn't have nabbed the fence," agreed McEniry. "He must have told these gunmen he hired that his name was Merriam, too, eh?"

Montigny shook his head. "I think they knew who he was, but Callen did not. It had been fully a year since Callen had seen Merriam—it is unlikely that he would have recognized Merriam's voice on the telephone, and Coulter talked to the fence only by telephone."

The Inspector ordered Coulter sent in.

"We'll make that bird tell us where his heavy men are hiding out," vowed McEniry.

The new suspect in the Elderbank case had lost none of his well-bred manner of unaffected assurance. He seemed to regard the proceedings with kindly amusement. He spoke to Montigny affably.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Captain."

"The pleasure," said Montigny ironically, "is all yours. To me this is very hard work."

"They finally got around to me, as I was sure they would," observed Coulter nonchalantly. "Almost everybody has been suspected, up to date, except perhaps Mr. and Mrs. Kirkman. When are they to be arrested, Captain?"

"Yours, I think," replied Montigny grimly, "will be the last arrest. We already have in custody, you know, your good friends Jerry Joe Lattimer and Gus Heinemann."

"You bet, and they've come through with the whole works," growled McEniry.

Not a flicker of betrayal touched Coulter's calm countenance. He raised his brows in mild inquiry.

"Friends of mind, did you say? What are the names?"

"Lattimer and Heinemann—but I fancy you heard me the first time. They are not, of course, their Christian or law-abiding names. Whimsical chaps, these gunmen. They insist on speaking of you as 'Merriam.' Where did you get the idea, Coulter?"

"Merriam," Coulter said, "is the name of the man who sent around that cash bond to get him out of jail the other day."

"May I guess?" suggested Montigny.

"Sure. Guess all you want to. Who was it?"

"Mr. Coulter? Mr. Douglas W. Coulter?"

McEniry looked at him sharply. "Yeah. How'd you know? What's he got to do with this mess?"

"Much," said Montigny. "Will you arrest him for me, Inspector?"

"Inspector stared. 'Going off half-cocked,' Montigny? What's the charge?"

"Murder," said Montigny. The Inspector started to say something more, but instead he reached for the telephone.

The proposed all-night grilling by means of which the Inspector had hoped to force a confession from Price Merriam halted unceremoniously with the arrest of Coulter.

A detective brought the latter to headquarters even before McEniry had heard all that Montigny and the chemist had to tell him.

"Captain Montigny is unquestionably right," the soap expert told McEniry. "I will stake my reputation as a chemist upon it—the ring which I have examined contains imbedded particles of Fallet toilet soap, and soap, moreover, ingrained with soot which corresponds microscopically with the sample of soot from the fireplace in question."

The Inspector listened to his detailed technical explanations with growing conviction.

"For heaven's sake hang on to that ring, Montigny," the Inspector enjoined him. "It's our one and only bit of evidence against the man. I can see it all now. I admit you're right—he used the name of Merriam because he didn't want to say the fence to know who he was. But the thing I'm worried about is making a jury see it—even with Doctor Inman's expert testimony."

"I shall be ready to serve you at any time," Doctor Inman promised, saying good-night. "I did not use any of your evidence in this test—a locket ring of that character is fortunately a catch-all. The soap adhering to it is amenable for other tests, by other chemists. I am sorry I was not available yesterday; I might have shortened your inquiry. But Captain Montigny seemed to prefer me to all other chemists because I alone know the formula of Fallet soap. Call me when you need me again, gentlemen."

"Great work," McEniry told him. "And you'll certainly hear from us again."

When they were alone the Inspector shook Montigny's hand solemnly.

I apologize, Captain, for all the dirty clues. I made about a dozen fancy clues," said McEniry. "If you hadn't come into this case I guess we'd have burnt the wrong man. This slick bird Coulter certainly covered his tracks—except for this one slip-up."

Montigny shrugged deprecatingly. "He was perhaps too cunning. There is a point where too much art becomes merely artifice. The small bar safely cleared of one lie—unbelievable with other lies—unnecessary lies—to make it more convincing. It was the unnecessary lie of the smeared bedclothing which trapped Coulter."

"Rubbish," said Coulter.

"And you should not have tried to incriminate the poor dancing boy, Roger Duane, by smearing soot on the coverlet. It should have been enough to replace the mouthpiece of Mrs. Elderbank's telephone—and to loop the long cord on the shutter box at Doctor Inman's window. But the planting of the stolen watch—really, Mr. Coulter, that was too much. It was also much too simple. I am surprised at you."

CHAPTER XLIII

"I am not sufficiently interested to be surprised at you," said Coulter contemptuously. "You are talking gibberish, absolute gibberish. The haven't the slightest idea how you thought up all this nonsense."

"Eh, bien, I shall tell you more that I thought up," rejoined Montigny. "It was not so safe as you thought, to use the hare-brained artist, Valcour, to deliver the stolen goods to your fence. He boasted too much of your valued friendship. Could we have him in, by the way, Inspector?"

McEniry grumpily barked an order into his telephone.

"He reminded me, this Valcour," continued Montigny, "that you had some of his best paintings in your apartment, including his Goldfish Surrounded by Blue. It seemed an inspiration to you, the use of this Goldfish. You had only to open its back, and insert the stolen stones. No one but your fence Callen, and he only by special arrangement, would buy that wretched picture from the art shop."

St. Gregory Valcour and Detective Mabry came in from the adjoining room.

"Oh, hello!" chirped Coulter as if in cheerful surprise. "If it isn't my friend the artist! What are you here for, Valcour? Have you been burning more paintings as a sacrifice to Art?"

"Good-evening, Mr. Coulter," said Valcour, in a voice that shook with fright. The strain of Valcour's recent experiences had left him pale and haggard. "I don't know just why they're holding me—I gave myself up. They're hinting that I helped—helped kill Mrs. Elderbank!"

"Oh, don't worry about that," Coulter counseled him lightly. "They're suspecting everybody of that. Even me."

Inspector McEniry had an ugly scowl on his brow.

"You birds keep your yapping traps shut until you're spoken to," he shouted. "Understand that?"

"Perfectly, Inspector," replied Coulter. "But why be so harsh? We're only poor meek suspects, after all."

The telephone saved Coulter from physical violence.

"Yes, what is it?" barked McEniry, answering it.

There was utter silence in the room save for the undistinguishable voice that crackled in the receiver.

"What?" exclaimed the Inspector, and then in a louder voice: "What! No. Never mind. I'll be right out."

McEniry slammed down the receiver and hurriedly left the office.

Coulter rose. "I should think I might use the telephone now," he said calmly.

Detective Mabry pushed him back in his seat. "No, you don't! You'll do nothing till the Inspector says you can."

It was scarcely a minute later when the door to the adjoining office opened abruptly and Inspector McEniry boomed in.

"Come in here, Montigny. Leave those birds till later. This is something that can't wait!"

Montigny hurriedly joined him in the outer office, where a group of detectives milled about in haste.

"They've croaked Cupples!" said McEniry hoarsely.

"Cupples!"

"Pumped him full of lead. The boys just found him, in the Elderbank house. And they've got the man that did it—caught him on the roof, trying to get away."

"Who?"

"Cupples—dead!" exclaimed Montigny softly. "I had not looked for this. I had hoped to take him alive."

"What do you mean—take him alive?" cried the Inspector. "Cupples wasn't in on this—he didn't do anything."

"Inspector, you are so trustful!" said Montigny reproachfully. "He was your favorite stool-pigeon. He was your favorite stool-pigeon, no doubt, but he remained an able thief. I think you will find very soon, Inspector, that Cupples and 'Gus Heinemann' are one and the same!"

A shrieking, hysterical, drug-ravaged prisoner was dragged into Inspector McEniry's office half an hour later.

It was all that two brawny detectives could do to hold Joe Lattimer when he caught sight of Coulter.

"There he is—I knew you had him—the dirty, double-crossing—!" howled Jerry Joe. "I told him he'd burn for it, when he jerked the ice off that dead woman. But just gimme my red Chief—gimme my red back just a minute, and I'll save you the trouble." He lunged forward and spat at Coulter. "Play me for a sucker, would you? Hold out on me when I done the dirty work, would you?"

"Pipe down," growled Inspector McEniry

HAGAN'S HIT IN NINTH BRINGS CASEY'S VICTORY

"Bobby" Hagan's two base hit in the ninth inning paved the way for the Casey's third straight win of the Bristol Twilight League season yesterday on the Edgely diamond. The Edgely A. C. heretofore undefeated were the victims with the final count being 5-4. Hagan's double scored Ithig who had reached base as a result of an error by "Joie" Dick.

"Reds" Devine began on the mound for the Casey's but left in the fourth and was relieved by Korkel. Korkel almost gave the game away in the ninth when he passed three batters and Hunter's long fly scored a run.

Ira Walterick pitched the entire game for the losers and gave up six singles while the losers had a like number from Korkel and Devine.

FORM ASSOCIATION OF BOYS IN MORRISVILLE

MORRISVILLE, May 20.—Under the sponsorship of the Capitol View Fire Company, a new junior organization for Morrisville's younger boys has been formed, known as the Capitol View Athletic Association. The idea of the organization is to interest local youngsters in some form of athletics, with several sports to be coached by the organizers.

Bob White, formerly a crack baseball star in this area, will direct the organization's doings, with able assistance from Russ Malmesbury, former Morrisville High School all-around athlete. The above two will have direct charge of all activities with the boys and will coach the various sports throughout the season. A finance committee of the company, consisting of George Duke, Dick Watson and Al Roberts, will take care of all expenses and assist the directors in any way possible.

It is planned to teach such sports as baseball, track, swimming, quads, wrestling, basketball, boxing, football and any other athletic games. Morrisville youngsters from any section will be eligible who have not reached their 17th birthday anniversary. Malmesbury was a brilliant competitor in track, baseball, basketball, and football and will give much help to Director White, who is well known in this area for his diamond prowess. Benefit games probably will be held, with local institutions to gain through the efforts of the association.

Take Up New Questions

HARRISBURG, May 20.—Having solved the problem of providing relief funds for the next year by agreement on a $60,000,000 relief tax program, the legislature today turned to a host of new questions, many of them of a controversial nature. The new day adjournment now expected early in June. New controversies impending over the Sunday motion picture bill, social and labor bills, constitutional revision, legalized horse racing and betting, legalized lottery, changes in liquor laws, appropriations for the coming biennium, "authorities" to push the Federal Works program in this state and administration of relief.

While a committee representing both chambers went to work to iron out their differences on the new cigarette tax bill, the House made ready to approve the last three of the ten new tax bills still remaining on its agenda. They were the Stewart bill boosting the gasoline tax one cent a gallon, expected to be passed by Wednesday, the Patterson bill, changing the present one mill, metropolitan bill, the Roth bill taxing checks two cents, the latter two slated for final passage tonight or tomorrow.

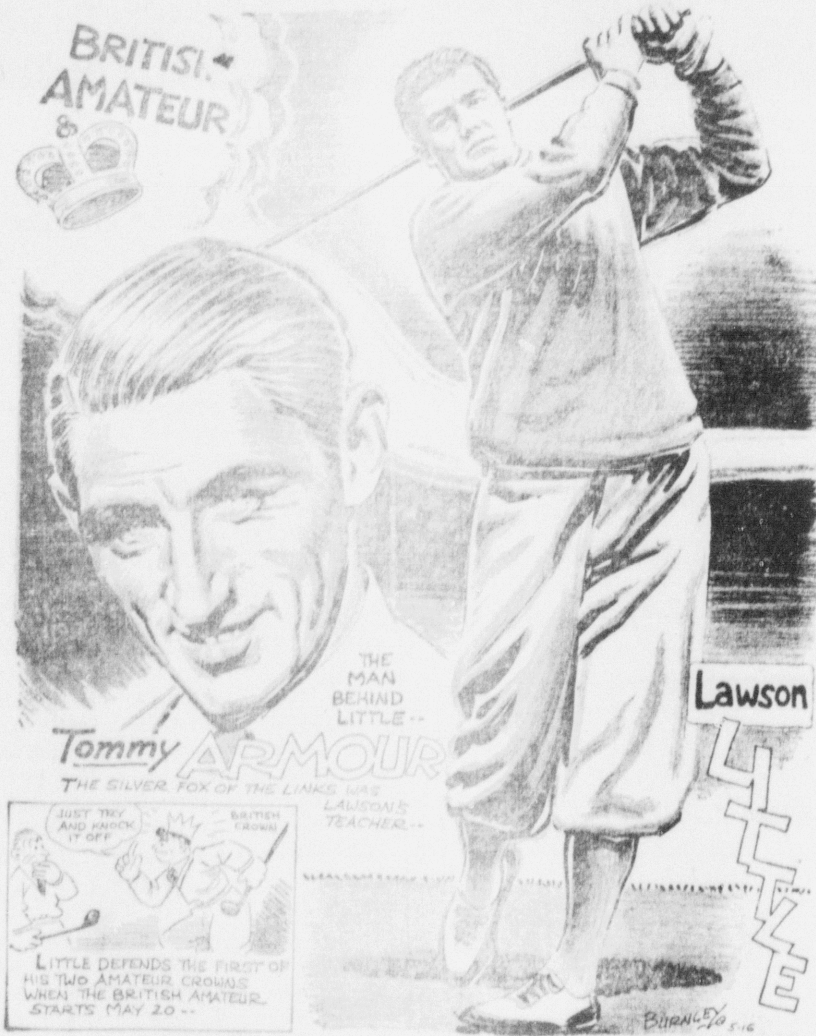

Sponsors of the Sunday motion picture bill claimed it would pass the House on the basis of an unofficial poll, but made no prediction as to its fate in the Senate.

A battle was expected in the Senate when administration leaders, opened their drive to restore the constitutional revision bill to its original form. The Dent-Bald horse racing and betting bill was on the calendar for the first time and may come to a vote this week. Stepping ahead on the agenda was the Sowers bill setting up a state lottery to raise $100,000,000 for pensions and the aged, also opposed by the churches.

Warned by Governor George H. Earle that he will ask the legislature to remain for the summer to act on his social and labor bills, the Senate will hold a public hearing tonight on the administration measure liberalizing the Workmen's Compensation Act and providing compensation for occupational diseases.

Ready to Defend His Crown

By BURNLEY

Tommy Armour, the silver fox of the links, is preparing for the forthcoming British Amateur with the odds heavily against his retaining his title in this most hazardous of golf competitions.

On form, the Stanford Siege Gun is unquestionably the best competitive player in the amateur ranks, and it would seem that he should be favored to retain his double diadem, if golf were not such an uncertain game, and if the amateur title tournaments were not played on the "sudden death" style of 18-hole match play in the early rounds.

Little will not play in the U. S. Open this Summer, but instead will remain over in the tight little island after the British Amateur in order to practice for the British Open. Lawson made a very fine showing in the Augusta Masters' tourney this Spring, showing that he can be formidable even in a field of the world's best professionals, so it would be well to count him in when figuring out the probable winner of the British Open—even though Gene Sarazen, Henry Picard and other leading pros will be shooting for the same crown.

The powerful Californian has the soundest game of any amateur in recent years, possessing a terrific drive that is also remarkably straight as well as prodigiously long.

His iron play is patterned after that master of the iron game, Tommy Armour, who is Lawson's coach and teacher, and who has remedied many defects in the Stanford youth's game. Armour is one of the shrewdest and most capable of golf instructors, as well as being one of the game's best players, and Little has been fortunate in having such an ideal teacher.

Little also possesses a good short game, and is a steady, consistent putter. His competitive spirit gives him a decided edge over almost any opponent in match play, so perhaps he will come through successfully in defending both his crowns despite the hazardous road to be traveled in the British and U. S. amateur tourneys.

21 GOLFERS TAKE PRIZES IN YARDLEY TOURNAMENT

YARDLEY, May 20.—With more than 200 entrants, the two-day Kicker's tournament at the Yardley Country Club came to a successful close yesterday. The prizes will be awarded at the club house at 7:30 o'clock tonight.

The first number selected was 77, and it was held by 15 competitors. They are James McCormick, O. E. Martin, C. T. Yard, E. O'Hara, R. J. Eggert, D. Penrose, J. E. Boyd, C. Rink, Bill Dorey, G. McDermott, M. H. Connors, J. C. McCann, Tom Prior, T. Connors and F. Nossy. Four golfers who had 7's also figured in the prize winning. They are John Planchak, H. E. Graessmeyer, J. Hottel and E. Hara.

Joe Lambert was the winner of the three blind holes play. He scored a total of 15 strokes. The 7th, 10th and 13th all par 5 holes, were selected.

For scoring a nine on the track par 4 19th, Carl Gentz also figured in the awards. It was the highest tally scored in for this hole.

GRIMES TALKED WAY OUT OF MANAGERSHIP

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — (INS) — Burleigh Grimes might be a major league manager today if he had not voiced his opinion of the business tactics of an empire in protesting what he believed was a bad decision. Burleigh, now manager of the Springfield H. B. club, was speaking at a dinner at which he, Al Ecken, president of the Springfield Cardinals, and George Payne, Cardinal manager, were guests of honor.

"In one game I played," he recalled, "the umpire happened to be a blind dog breeder by avocation. He called out 'I don't like and I protested'."

He ordered me out of the game, I said, some remark connecting his playing ball players by his decisions with his playing short-sides by selling them second-rate big dogs.

"That'll cost you fifty," he said, "I'll give you fifty more, I came back he did."

It so happened a club owner sitting in the stands had been planning to make me his manager, but when he saw me arguing like that with the umpire, the deal was off."

EDGELY WINS 2; DOLINGTON SPLITS 2; H'LMVILLE LOSES

(By T. M. Juno)

The Edgely Braves gained ground in the race for the first half of the Delaware River League over the week-end by taking both of their scheduled games while Hulmeville A. A. dropped two and the Dolington team divided their pair. Yesterday, the Braves scored the most decisive win of the season, trimming the Hulmeville team, 9-5, on Reetz's field, Hulmeville. In the other games played yesterday, Morrisville trounced Bristol A. A., 15-4; Lambertville beat Washington Crossing, 6-1; and the Hibernians counted in their first victory of the season, lacing the Dolington club, 13-3.

"Freddie" Hibbs' two-base hit started the Edgelyites off to their win over the Hulmeville team. Hibbs doubled in the third with the sacks loaded to score three runs. Two more hits followed and this was enough to send "Wils" Holland to the showers. He was relieved by "Stan" Carlen who got by with his fast ball until the ninth when the Braves let loose with another barrage of base knocks. Two doubles and a triple in succession put the game on ice for the Edgelyites in this inning after the Hulmeville club had shaved the early lead by three tallies in the eighth.

Bud Wright prevented a dangerous rally in the eighth when he came in fast for "Dutch" Ammerbach's liner which robbed the hitter of a possible double or triple. In the seventh, Hulmeville filled the sacks but Fred Hibbs stuck his gloved hand out for Watson's liner and touched first for a double-play. For Hulmeville, "Johnny" Hemp made a beautiful running catch of Wright's fly in the seventh and Rockhill came up fast with Dougherty's roller in the first. "Stan" Carlen hit a home run in the eighth for Hulmeville. Of the eleven hits made by the winners, four were doubles and two triples.

The Hibernians had an "on" afternoon in trouncing the Dolington club. They slammed the offerings of Matthews and Lewellen for a total of seventeen safe blows and seemed to score at will. "Tiny" Harrison and Barney Lyzack had four safe blows each in the triumph while "Nev" McGinley snapped out of his batting slump with a triple and two singles.

"Hal" Snyder pitched the entire match for the Hibernians and although found for ten hits kept them well-scattered to escape trouble at all times. He would have had a shut out win if Snow's roller did not take a bounce over Dougherty's head in the eighth frame.

The pitching of "Handy" Hann was too much for the Washington Crossing team as it dropped its third game of the league season. Hann had the Crossing team well in check throughout while the Lambies were nipping away at Gray for runs in the first two innings. The winners made seven hits but they came at the opportune moments of the fray.

Morrisville scored seven runs in the fourth and six in the sixth to trim the Bristol A. A. team after the A's had given the Hulmeville team its first defeat of the season on Saturday afternoon. The A. A. did not appear the same club that beat Hulmeville and played poorly both with the stick and the field.

Malmesbury, Morrisville, hit a home run with two on base in the fourth while Ryan socked a four-bagger with one on in the sixth. "Shorpy" Stromp got four bases on his blow in the fifth.
